

VII ICCEES WORLD CONGRESS IN BERLIN 25 – 30 JULY 2005 “EUROPE – OUR COMMON HOME?”

PROVISIONAL PROGRAMME, REGISTRATION, ACCOMMODATION

Dear Sirs and Mesdames,
it is a great honour for the German Association for East European Studies (DGO) to be asked by the ICCEES Executive Committee to organise the VII World Congress in Berlin. After the congress in Garmisch-Patenkirchen 1980, it is the second time that the ICCEES World Congress takes place in Germany. The DGO is very pleased about this, and we hope that we were successful in our efforts to offer all participants an interesting and pretentious programme as well as an exciting frame programme.

The congress venue for the VII World Congress will be the Humboldt University, located in the Eastern part and heart of the City. The opening ceremony will be held at the congress hall Haus der Kulturen der Welt, close to the Brandenburger Gate, and the closing ceremony will take place at the Humboldt University.

For the social programme the embassies and cultural institutes in Berlin have been asked to engage in the subject of the World Congress. Information on this will be provided on the ICCEES website by March 2005 (www.iccees2005.de).

At it's meeting at the European Academy in Berlin on 23 - 25 April 2004, the Programme Committee agreed on the provisional programme for the congress. This is subject to amendment, and some additions will be made in fields where the Committee considers being gaps.

The official languages of the Congress will be English, French, German and Russian. All parts of the programme must be in one of these languages. The congress organisation will not provide translation, except for the opening and closing ceremonies. Here simultaneous translation between English, Russian and German will be available. The administrative language is English.

This newsletter contains the programme as well as information on registration, accommodation, excursions, and the city of Berlin. As the capital of Germany, Berlin can easily be reached by flight, train and bus.

We would like to invite all interested persons to come to Berlin to attend and participate in this exciting event. In addition to the academic programme there will be a varied social programme and excursions to cities in Eastern Germany.

The DGO is looking forward to welcoming you in Berlin and we hope that the information about the VII World Congress will spread around so that we may welcome over 2000 participants in Berlin next year.

Yours sincerely

Prof. Dr. Thomas Bremer
Chairman of the IPC

Dr. Heike Dörrenbächer

The organiser of ICCEES 2005 will be “Weltkongress 2005 e. V.”.

Description

The history of Central and Eastern Europe has been thoroughly changed through "ethnic cleansing". In some areas the previous population was completely changed as a result of World War II. New societies were formed in the postwar period. The German-Polish borderland is an area, where the long term results of "ethnic cleansing" can be felt until today. Although the generation which has lived through this experience and the Nazi occupation is dying out, the events of the traumatic decade between 1938 and 1948 are still present in the collective memory.

The first part of the excursion is a comparative panel titled "After the Expulsions. Borderlands in Postwar Central Europe" (see the programme for details). It will be followed by a "field trip" which gives an insight into the long term consequences of the events six decades ago. The organisers of the panel and the excursion will reserve a boat for an evening ride on the river Oder. This will show the unique beauty of nature in the German-Polish borderlands which was paradoxically also created through the removal of the previous population, the devastation in 1945 and after and the erection of a border which was closed for a long time. The participants will simultaneously get an impression about the new reality of the Polish-German border after the expansion of the European Union. Besides all academic merits the excursion should be great fun.

After the end of boat ride we will take a train back to Berlin, which is only one hour from Frankfurt/Oder.

THE CITY OF BERLIN AND THE HUMBOLDT UNIVERSITY

When the Berlin Wall fell, the Berlin region became the newest conurbation in Europe more or less overnight. But as a result of the division of Germany and Europe which lasted almost half a century, this city in the centre of the continent was in an extreme political and geographical border situation. The political changes in Europe restored Berlin to its former position in the middle of Europe.

Berlin is situated on the east-west axis from Paris to Warsaw/Moscow and on the north-south line from Stockholm to Prague/Vienna/Budapest. It has been transformed from the symbol of European division to the place where East and West Europe meet. The growing economy in Central and Eastern Europe finds a bridge to the western economy in Berlin. Companies with world-wide operations make use of the many institutions located in Berlin and the expertise that is concentrated here. Berlin's scientific, research and cultural institutions represent one of the invaluable strengths of the city.

Berlin's position as the new home of the German parliament and government did not just mean moving from the Rhine to the Spree. The federal states and regions of Germany have a new and cosmopolitan forum here. And for the central associations of German business and industry, the political centre offers the many possibilities of a city with a major international presence.

The urban density of the city area does not restrict the lifestyle of the people who live here. Germans from all over the country live here, and there are more than 430,000 people from 184 different nations. Lower rents for residential accommodation in the eastern boroughs and the greater supply of jobs in the western boroughs led to a new mixture of the population soon after unification. The new Berlin presents itself to visitors as an open city again. Brandenburg Gate – previously a symbol of the divided Germany – once more became the emblem of the German capital. Around it, the new centre of Berlin is rising up, a unique urban setting in which the old joins with the new, and the future of the city becomes visible. The city's calendar of events lists official opening ceremonies for government buildings, embassies, television studios, stations, residential and business areas and new transport routes. The signs of new beginnings, new buildings and modernisation can be seen throughout the city.

In an area of about 891 square kilometres – as large as Munich, Stuttgart and Frankfurt am Main together – Berlin unites a large number of urban districts, centres and boroughs which are completely different in character. In the inner part of the city, the buildings of the Kulturforum on the southern edge of the Tiergarten and the modern office and shopping complex on Potsdamer Platz link the western city around Kurfürstendamm with the eastern city in the historical centre of Berlin between Brandenburg Gate and Alexanderplatz. To the north of the Tiergarten, new buildings are being built for the federal government and the parliament in the meanderings of the Spree. The parliament has its seat in the Reichstag building, which has been remodelled.

The ring of the S-Bahn urban railway encloses the most densely developed area of the city. Green areas such as the Tiergarten, Treptow Park, Friedrichshain and numerous other parks and gardens, along with about 400,000 trees along the streets of the city, ensure a favourable climate in the central districts. Outside the ring of the S-Bahn urban railway, the density of urban development is significantly lower. The outlying boroughs are characterised by large areas of new development, villa districts, lakes, rivers and forests. These areas form a gentle transition to the less populated surrounding area with its idyllic woodland, its lake scenery and wide open agricultural spaces. For Berlin, which is enclosed by the federal state of Brandenburg, the newly regained surrounding area is a unique recreation area "outside the front door" which offers sport, leisure and recreation facilities and major tourist attractions.

Science and Research

Berlin's raw material is knowledge – the city has a science and research environment that is unique in Germany. At 3 universities, 10 specialist colleges, 4 art colleges and over 80 state-subsidised research establishments there are about 50,000 people working on products, solutions and innovations for the world of tomorrow. With its two university clinics, the Charité and the Benjamin Franklin Clinic, Berlin is continuing a successful tradition that is closely associated with the names of Rudolf Virchow, Robert Koch and Ferdinand Sauerbruch.

About 133,500 young people are studying at the universities and colleges. In relation to the Federal Republic as a whole, Berlin is thus making an above average contribution to the training of the young generation. The city sees itself as a laboratory in which ideas, products and social solutions are created.

The Cultural Scene in Berlin

The Berlin cultural scene with its volume, variety, liveliness and attractiveness contributes significantly to the unmistakable profile of the city. The seventeen state museums of the Stiftung Preussischer Kulturbesitz (Prussian Cultural Foundation) form the largest museum complex of the whole continent. Berlin is Germany's most important theatrical city. Berlin currently has three opera houses, over 150 theatres and stage companies, 800 choirs, about 170 museums and collections, about 300 communal and private galleries, over 250 public libraries, 265 cinemas and numerous other cultural institutions.

Every year, over six million people visit the museums and temporary exhibitions. In each season, the concert halls and theatres attract almost three million visitors. Statistics can hardly record the innumerable independent groups, small galleries and scene theatres, which perform in old courtyards, basements, shops or closed-down factories. For years, festivals such as the Bach Festival or the events organised within the framework of the Berlin Festivals – e.g. the International Film Festival, the Berlin Festival Weeks and the Jazz Festival – have occupied a firm place in the cultural calendar of the city. And happenings such as the Love Parade, the first and largest event of its kind in the world, which has attracted Techno fans to Berlin since 1992, help to gain Berlin an international reputation as a city of culture. The Berlin theatrical festival has brought noteworthy performances from German-speaking countries to the city since 1963. And since 1980 its more recent equivalent, the youth theatrical festival, has brought school and youth theatre performances from all over the Federal Republic to Berlin for short guest appearances.

Urban development and construction

After 1990, the reunified Berlin saw fundamentally changed conditions for urban development. Apart from urban repair projects in all areas of the East and between the East and the West, construction projects in the West also received new impetus. The buildings for the federal government and the parliament are being built in the Mitte borough. Private investors also took advantage of the new opportunities. They have not only created a new urban district between the Kulturforum and Potsdamer Platz, they have also developed new residential and business buildings throughout the city. For the inner city, the planners and supervisory authorities built on the insights of the 1980s. The historically developed urban setting is being cautiously developed with principles such as "critical reconstruction" and "respect for the historical substance" (the "inner city zoning plan").

In addition to architecture from the 19th and 20th century, modern buildings designed by international and German architects characterise the cityscape of Berlin. The outstanding example is the Reichstag, which has been redesigned by Norman Foster and now has a glass dome, which is open to visitors. For Potsdamer Platz, architects such as Helmut Jahn, Renzo Piano, Hans Kollhoff and Richard Rogers have designed offices, shops and apartments. With his Schützenstraße residential complex behind brightly coloured facades, Aldo Rossi follows on from the Berlin building plot structure, and Frank O'Gehry designed a new building on Pariser Platz for the DG Bank. Parts of Friedrichstraße have been redeveloped and now have stores and residential buildings designed by famous architects, such as the department store Galeries Lafayette (Jean Nouvel), the Triangel office and residential building (Josef Paul Kleihues) and the office building on Friedrichstraße, Mauerstraße and Krausenstraße (Philip Johnson).

The Humboldt University

The university was founded in Berlin in 1810, and the foundation concept of Wilhelm von Humboldt gave it the title "Mother of all modern universities".

This concept envisaged a "Universitas litterarum" which would achieve a unity of teaching and research and provide students with an all-round humanist education. This concept spread throughout the world and gave rise to the foundation of many universities of the same type over the next century and a half.

The concept of the academic and statesman Wilhelm von Humboldt was influenced, among others, by the reform ideas of the philosopher Johann Gottlieb Fichte, the first vice chancellor of the university, and by the theologian and philosopher Friedrich Schleiermacher.

From the outset, the university in Berlin had the four classical faculties of Law, Medicine, Philosophy and Theology. Its first academic term began with 256 students and 52 teaching staff. Professors such as Georg Friedrich Wilhelm Hegel (Philosophy), Karl Friedrich von Savigny (Law), August Boeckh (Classical Philology), Christoph Wilhelm Hufeland (Medicine) and Albrecht Daniel Thaer (Agriculture), shaped the profile of the individual faculties in accordance with Humboldt's concept.

Partly due to the influence of the natural scientist Alexander von Humboldt, the university pioneered the introduction of many new disciplines. The chemist August Wilhelm von Hofmann, the physicist Hermann von Helmholtz, the mathematicians Ernst Kummer, Leopold Kronecker, Karl Theodor Weierstrass (the "triple star of Mathematics") and the medical scientists Johannes Müller and Rudolf Virchow became known in their specialist areas far beyond the university in Berlin. Later, a total of 29 Nobel Prize winners did some of their scientific work at the university in Berlin, including Albert Einstein, Emil Fischer, Max Planck and Fritz Haber. And many famous people such as Heinrich Heine, Adelbert von Chamisso, Ludwig Feuerbach, Otto von Bismarck, Karl Liebknecht, Franz Mehring, Alice Salomon, Karl Marx and Kurt Tucholsky were also enrolled at the "Alma mater" of Berlin. Heinrich Mann was the first honorary doctor of the university after the end of the Second World War.

A Royal Home – the Palais Unter den Linden

The Prussian king, Friedrich Wilhelm III., donated the first building to the university – the former Palace of Prince Heinrich of Prussia. It was built from 1748 to 1766 on the splendid boulevard Unter den Linden, and it saw major extension work from 1913 to 1920. When the Royal Library was no longer sufficient for teaching requirements, a university library was established in 1831. In the course of the expansion of the university, which bore the name of "Friedrich-Wilhelms-Universität" from 1828, institutions that already existed in the city were integrated. One example is the Charité, which is still famous today. Friedrich I. had built a quarantine house outside the city walls to counter the threat of the plague. This "plague house" was used to accommodate the poor ill and the frail. As early as 1726, in its function as a military and citizens' hospital, this building was made into a training centre for military medicine and a school for doctors and surgeons. In 1727 the "soldier king" Friedrich Wilhelm decreed: "The building is to be called the Charité". The Faculty of Medicine took over the building in 1829. With the construction of natural science institutions in the second half of the 19th century, highly modern research and teaching facilities arose. The animal medicine school that had been founded in 1790 was integrated as the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine, and the agricultural college founded in 1881 became the Faculty of Agriculture. In 1889 a building was opened at Invalidenstrasse 43 for the natural history collections that had belonged to the university since 1810. This building is now the Museum of Natural History. The close links between the clinical and pre-clinical facilities of the Faculty of Medicine created a generous spatial connection between scientific disciplines at the turn of the century.

29 Nobel Prize Winners

The early decades of the 20th century were characterised by great academic achievements and international attractiveness. In 1901, Jacobus Henricus van't Hoff from the Netherlands received the university's first Nobel Prize for Chemistry for his research into the laws of chemical dynamics. The antiquity expert Theodor Mommsen published trend setting work on Roman History, and in 1902 he received the Nobel Prize for Literature. 27 other Nobel Prizes reflect the outstanding scientific achievements of the academics who worked at the university in Berlin. The chemist Walter Nernst and the physicists Max von Laue, Gustav Hertz and James Franck are worth noting. Emil von Behring received the first Nobel Prize for Medicine for the development of an effective cure for diphtheria, and some years later Robert Koch, who discovered the tuberculosis and cholera bacteria, also obtained the Nobel Prize.

When the latest Nobel Prize to be awarded to a (former) member of the university was awarded to the co-founder of quantum mechanics, Max Born in 1954 for "Establishing a new way of thinking about natural phenomena" (Born), the university had been through a dark chapter of German history: The expulsion of Jewish academics and students and political opponents of National Socialism, and the extermination of some, did great damage to the university in the period from 1933 to 1945. And it was a shameful moment for the university when students and lecturers took part in the burning of books on 10th May 1933. After that and in the subsequent war years, many academics left the university that had once been renowned as the home of humanitarian thought.

Since 1908 women have been admitted to universities in Prussia and soon afterwards they were employed as assistant and associate professors in teaching and research as was, for example, the physicist Lise Meitner. From 1945 on women could become full professors as well.

Re-opening after World War II

Weakened by this great loss of scientific potential, teaching was resumed in January 1946 with seven faculties in partly war-damaged buildings. The political turmoil of the post-war period and the protest of students and lecturing staff against the increasing Communist influence on the university led to a division among the staff and students. As a result, the Freie Universität of Berlin was founded in December 1948 in the American sector of the city.

From 1949, the university bore the names of the brothers Alexander and Wilhelm von Humboldt. However, the university reforms of 1950/51 and 1967/68 caused the university to develop in a way that ran counter to its former academic traditions and changed the academic content, study procedures and research conditions in obedience to the ruling ideology. Nevertheless, it was still possible in some areas to restore international contacts and create worldwide cooperation. The longstanding and intensive research and exchange links with the universities in Eastern Europe and particularly in the former Soviet Union are worth special mentioning; many of these links are without parallel in Germany. In addition, formal academic cooperation with nearly all universities in the capital cities of Western Europe has existed since the 1970s. Close relations to universities in Japan and the United States, as well as Asian, African and Latin American countries, have been in place for some time.

Following German unification in 1990, Humboldt-Universität seized the opportunity to enhance international components in both teaching and research, and to increase the mobility of its students. This was done with an explicit continuation of previously existing international cooperation and exchange agreements. Future development is focused upon three areas: the strengthening of contacts within the EC, especially under the auspices of the Sokrates/Erasmus Program; the cultivation of academic and student exchange opportunities with North American universities and colleges; and the stabilisation of relations with partner institutions in Central and Eastern Europe. The university currently maintains formal contact to nearly 100 academic institutions on all continents, and holds more than 400 formal contracts within the Sokrates Program. Students from over 100 different foreign countries are presently enrolled at Humboldt-Universität. Foreign students comprise 10,9% of the entire student population.

Evaluation and Restructuring

Due to the unification Berlin maintains three universities. Thus, arising from the problems connected with the unification process, Humboldt-Universität went through an extraordinary process of reorganisation and succeeded in gaining outstanding scientists and scholars from East and West, from Germany and abroad. With the aid of partly external structural and appointment commissions and with numerous expertises and recommendations from groups of experts, Humboldt-University developed its own new academic structures. The content was evaluated, changed and redefined. At the same time, the entire staff was subjected to personal and academic scrutiny. Financial restrictions and structural factors led to a drastic reduction in personnel. As a result of the internal restructuring process, Humboldt-Universität is now made up of eleven faculties and two central institutes. The present Medical Faculty Charité of Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin has become the largest medical faculty in Europe as a result of the merger of the University Clinic Charité with the Virchow Clinic of Freie Universität Berlin.

The University Library, with its numerous smaller constituent libraries, has an inventory of 4.2 million books and periodicals, 1.3 million dissertations and 530,000 other materials. Among its most precious exhibits is the library of the Grimm brothers, with about 5,500 volumes.
