Papers on all topics dealing with formal aspects of any area of theoretical Slavic linguistics (synchronic or diachronic) are welcome. Presentations will take twenty minutes, with an additional ten minute discussion. Abstracts should be anonymous and no longer than one page (an additional page for references and examples can be also included), with margins of at least 1 inch, letter size 12. Submissions are limited to a maximum of one individual and one joint abstract per author. Abstracts should be sent by e-mail as a Word or RTF file, or by regular mail (6 copies). Attach a separate file containing: title, author's name and address, affiliation and e-mail address.

We hope to make a program available by March 30, 2003.

Invited speakers are Robert D. Borsley, John F. Bailyn and Helen Goodluck.

Special Session on Slavic Psycholinguistics

As a one-time event, there will be a special poster session at FASL-12 on Slavic Psycholinguistics, including but not limited to first and second language acquisition, language attrition, processing, language disorders and neurolinguistics. Abstracts for the special session will be refereed separately from the abstracts submitted to the general session. Same specifications as for general session FASL abstract submission apply. You may submit the same abstract to both the regular FASL-12 program and to the special poster session; in that case, you must indicate on the top of your abstract which venue would be your first choice, if both are accepted. Papers from this session will be published in a special edition of Cahiers Linguistiques d'Ottawa.
